Senate Resolution No. 2.

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God in his wisdom to remove from our midst a great editor, a loyal citizen of Texas and a man of unusual ability and fine personal qualities in the recent untimely death of Eugene R. Millis of Houston; and

Whereas, Mr. Millis, through his work as chief editorial writer for the Houston Chronicle, and through his many personal contacts, was an influence for good and for sanity and for clear thinking among the various branches of our State government; and

Whereas, Although not a native of Texas, he was an adopted son since early manhood, having been brought to Texas by his father, a Methodist minister of fine learning and high esteem in his chosen work, was educated at Rice Institute, graduating in the second class from that great college, returned to Houston, Texas, with deep affection for the people and the aspirations of this great commonwealth, after the war, and cast his lot among us; married there, bought his home there, and in every way became a part of the life of the community around him; and

Whereas, Realizing that the man of the pen often can be of greater service than he in the army or he on the hustings, he prepared himself by serious study of all our problems to write worthily for our instruction and our inspiration; and

Whereas, For a decade, his editorials have dealt genuinely and clearly and, above all, honestly and fairly with the problems of government and with all the grave issues before our people, with taxes, with relief, with assistance to the underprivileged, with schools and all other branches of our cultural life; he was liberal, but not a demagogue, firm but not dogmatic; and

Whereas, Though the medium of expression is different, the members of this House have had a great unity of thought and purpose with the same high ideals which stirred him to write in forceful language, to ex-Senator-elect, W. L. Winfield, from | hort where exhortation was needed, to chide when a public purpose was served thereby, and freely to praise DeBerry. when praise was deserved; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of Texas express its deepest regret at the passing of this great citizen, and that when it adjourns today it do so in his memory; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to his family.
